

I understand that the FCC is looking to establish a law that will lessen some of Indiana's Telephone Privacy law protections. As a beneficiary of the current law, I would prefer that you leave Indiana's law as is. I prefer not receiving any telephone solicitation calls. I went from around 10 per week to almost none. Considering that most of these calls occur at dinner time, the unneeded interruptions aren't missed at all. Any overriding national law should not diminish any existing state laws. National regulations should at least provide the same protections.
